The winners for this award:

College of Business Arts and Social Sciences

Chris Cox

"The Winner has been an outstanding personal tutor. They have been incredibly useful and supportive on a series of occasions. In the first place, they have always been actively looking to help the students even outside office hours with personal projects or by reviewing their CVs. The winner also often drops by the Games Design laboratories after finishing work to help students with the programming for their prototypes."

College of Engineering Design and Physical Sciences

Stephen Cockett

"The winner has provided students with exceptional support and guidance throughout. Whenever students have needed some of their time to discuss work or even any non-academic issues they have been there to offer this and provide students with tremendous encouragement and suggestions that enable them to get the best out of what they are doing."

College of Health and Life Sciences

Edwin Routledge

"As a PhD supervisor this winner has always been available whenever their students needed them and they make time to meet in person, or if the student is at home they will happily Skype (video call). Whenever students send work to them to review, it comes back almost immediately, and on more than one occasion a student has submitted a piece of work on Friday and it has been returned, with comments and corrections, only a day or two later and during their free time. "

"The highlighting element of this winner is that their teaching method is suitable for different student's learning styles, They uses various types of methods to engage with students, to motivate them in topics or discussions. They also provide in depth information about a topic that students are discussing in lecture or seminar, which is beneficial to many students, as they are then able to engage with materials and research about it. "

College of Engineering Design and Physical Sciences

Robert Macredie

"During the lecture sessions, this winner always takes an interactive approach to teaching and engages their students by asking questions creating an interactive dialogue. They also provide outstanding support for students who may need additional clarification or help on a particular taught topic. This helps students maximise their time and attain success at university. "

College of Health and Life Sciences

Christian Rudolph

"This winner makes every lecture engaging and it's very evident they put a lot of effort into making it so. It's obvious they care about student's learning and understanding and not purely their own research. People enjoy going to their lectures because it's a really interactive learning experience, not just sitting and listening to someone. "
